

Coopers Rock State Forest

COOPERS ROCK STATE FOREST gets its name from a legend about a fugitive who hid from the law near what is now the overlook. A cooper by trade, he resumed making barrels at his new mountain hideout, selling them to people in nearby communities. He lived and worked in the forest for many years.

The forest is 13 miles east of Morgantown and eight miles west of Bruceton Mills. Its 12,713 acres are bisected by Interstate 68. Although the forest, like West Virginia's state parks, serves as a recreation and historic preservation area, it has a wider range of uses. West Virginia's state forests serve as areas of publicly owned land for forestry research, timber management, and watershed and wildlife protection.

The side north of the Interstate, known as the West Virginia University Forest, makes up the forest management area leased by the West Virginia University Division of Forestry and Natural Resources for forestry research, teaching and demonstration. To the south of Interstate 68 is the main recreation area.

Bands of cliffs line the Cheat River gorge and provide numerous lookouts. The centerpiece among these is the Main Overlook, which furnishes a panorama of the gorge and distant horizons. A maze of enormous boulders and cliffs fascinate hikers, and the trails are especially lovely in June when the rhododendron and mountain laurel are in bloom. Several trails wind through forest valleys and over ridges, and a number of creeks beckon the explorer. Glade Run is dammed to form a six-acre pond that is regularly stocked with trout. The observant hiker can hear and sometimes see squirrels, chipmunks, hawks, owls, turkeys, turkey vultures, songbirds, fox and deer throughout the forest.

HISTORY OF THE FOREST

DURING THE GREAT DEPRESSION, between 1936 and 1942, the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) built numerous structures in the forest, often using durable American chestnut wood from trees that succumbed to a blight that nearly wiped out the species. Eleven of these structures, including the rustic picnic shelters near the overlook, have been placed in the National Register of Historic Places.
